

FRESHMAN RULINGS WILL BE ENFORCED

Morris Dry, Student President, Says Violators Will Be Dealt With.

CAPS MUST BE WORN

Student Senate Will Handle Complaints — Expulsion Will Be Penalty.

Morris E. Dry, president of the student body of the University of Missouri, this morning called attention to the rulings regarding conduct and appearance of freshmen which it is required the Student Senate of the institution shall enforce. Mr. Dry returned to take up his work in the University after a summer spent in Minneapolis.

Instead of the hazing which was the usual thing up until two years ago, the University authorities and the student body insist only that freshmen students shall wear different colored caps, which denote the school or college in which the freshman later expects to be entered. The rule regarding caps, according to Mr. Dry, will be rigidly enforced and any violations of this or any of the other rules listed in the student handbook will be dealt with by the Student Senate.

Freshmen Must Wear Caps.

All freshmen who wear caps and observe the other minor rules which have become permanent through years of usage at the University will have no trouble with the governing bodies of the University. However, any freshman who violates the rules will be called before the Student Senate for an explanation and, if he fails in this, his case will be brought before the Discipline Committee with a recommendation for expulsion.

The rules against hazing were passed two years ago by a unanimous vote of the student body. Last year there was practically no hazing and only a few cases of any trouble with freshmen were reported. The anti-hazing rules were passed as a result of serious injuries received by freshmen and sophomores in the annual bag rush in 1915.

Student Senate to Get Complaints.

The Student Senate, through its president, L. R. Fuller, has asked that all cases of violations of freshmen rules be reported to it at once. The rules regarding freshmen follow: Until Thanksgiving freshmen in the College of Arts and Science shall wear red caps; in the College of Agriculture white caps, and in the School of Engineering green caps.

Except upon the call of the president of the student body freshmen shall not have class meetings during the first semester.

Freshmen shall not walk on the grass on the campus.

Freshmen shall not smoke or chew on the campus.

Freshmen shall stay out of pool halls until Thanksgiving.

Violations of these rules shall be dealt with by the Student Senate.
